

WHEREAS; according to the World Health Organization, tuberculosis is one of the leading causes of death from an infectious disease worldwide, and one-quarter of the global population is infected with the bacteria that causes tuberculosis disease; and

WHEREAS; the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) reported that the rate of tuberculosis cases increased in 2023, with over 9,000 Americans falling ill with the disease, including a higher-than-average number of Wisconsinites, according to the Wisconsin Department of Health Services (DHS); and

WHEREAS; high-risk factors of tuberculosis include coming into close contact with someone infected by the disease or having a weakened immune system as a result of medication or health conditions, such as HIV infection, and the CDC recommends that everyone at higher risk for tuberculosis infection and progression be screened and tested; and

WHEREAS; accessing timely evaluation and treatment for tuberculosis, as well as encouraging treatment for latent tuberculosis infection with approved regimens, can provide affected individuals with a cure, helping to preserve health and wellness and serving as a successful means of preventing the further spread of disease; and

WHEREAS; despite recent advancements, disparities in tuberculosis persist as communities with structural inequities face reduced or limited access to healthcare and routine screening, creating barriers in the evaluation and treatment of tuberculosis and infections and underscoring the need for increased access to quality healthcare; and

WHEREAS; this week, the state of Wisconsin reaffirms its commitment to building a healthcare system that works for everyone and joins survivors of tuberculosis, those who are battling the disease, their loved ones, and the state's many dedicated organizations and advocates, including the Wisconsin Tuberculosis Program within the DHS, in spreading awareness, committing to public education regarding prevention, testing, and treatment for the disease, and working to eliminate health disparities in Wisconsin;

NOW, THEREFORE, I, Tony Evers, Governor of the State of Wisconsin, do hereby proclaim March 23 through 29 2025 as
