

WHEREAS; located at 400 N. Plankinton Ave., Milwaukee’s Black Nite Bar was one of the city’s most popular gay bars during the early 1960s, and one of the only safe and celebratory spaces that existed for folks identifying as lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, and queer (LGBTQ) in Milwaukee at the time; and

WHEREAS; on the evening of August 5, 1961, several men attempted to enter the Black Nite with the intention of bullying, harassing, and assaulting its patrons, but were forcibly removed by the bar’s employees and patron, Josie Carter, a gender non-conforming woman of color and leader in Milwaukee’s burgeoning LGBTQ community; and

WHEREAS; upon their return to the Black Nite later that evening with threats of further violence, the attackers were met by courageous patrons who—inspired and mobilized by Carter to take a stand for themselves and their community—defended the bar, culminating in an intense brawl that made headlines across the city; and

WHEREAS; the Black Nite Brawl, as it has come to be called, was the first known LGBTQ uprising in Wisconsin history and one of the first in the history of the United States, having occurred eight years before the historic Stonewall Riots in New York City; and

WHEREAS; the Black Nite Brawl was monumental in mobilizing LGBTQ individuals to come together, form a community, and demand liberation and equality and was instrumental in sparking a movement for LGBTQ rights in Milwaukee and fostering a more visible and vibrant gay culture, which persists to this day; and

WHEREAS; in 2022, the site of the Black Nite Uprising was designated by the Milwaukee County Historical Society as a Milwaukee County Historic Landmark, making it the first LGBTQ landmark in the county; and

WHEREAS; although progress has been made to advance LGBTQ rights in Wisconsin and across the United States in the 60 years since the Black Nite Brawl, much more work remains to ensure that LGBTQ-identified family members, friends, and neighbors—and transgender individuals and LGBTQ people of color, in particular—are treated equitably and with dignity under the law in Wisconsin and across the country; and

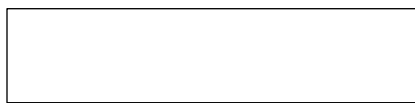

WHEREAS; today, the state of Wisconsin joins the city of Milwaukee, Milwaukee County, all Milwaukeeans, and all Wisconsinites in recognizing the 62nd anniversary of the Black Nite Brawl, denouncing homophobia and all forms of discrimination and hate, and celebrating LGBTQ-identified individuals across the state as part of Wisconsin’s collective history and heritage;
