

WHEREAS; vaccines are critical to ensuring the health and well-being of people and communities in Wisconsin and around the world; and

WHEREAS; in areas with high vaccination rates, the spread of preventable diseases is either stopped or greatly reduced and, in turn, rates of hospitalization and death from vaccine-preventable diseases are greatly reduced; and

WHEREAS; while many diseases are effectively and safely controlled by immunization, these illnesses still exist, and when vaccination rates in a community drop, outbreaks occur and unvaccinated adults and children are at risk of contracting serious, potentially debilitating illnesses; and

WHEREAS; scientific and medical experts overwhelmingly agree that vaccines—including routine childhood and adult vaccines—are effective, safe, and instrumental in protecting folks from contracting preventable diseases; and

WHEREAS; the dissemination of misinformation about vaccine safety poses a significant public health risk, as communities with low vaccination rates compromise the health and livelihood of infants, young children, seniors, individuals with immunodeficiency disorders, individuals with weakened or compromised immune systems, and the general public; and

WHEREAS; now more than ever, educating folks about the importance of immunization and routine vaccinations in childhood and throughout a lifetime is key to ensuring public health, safety, and awareness, and our state remains committed to providing equitable access to both education and immunization in every community; and

WHEREAS; this month, the state of Wisconsin joins the majority of our world's scientists, medical professionals, and experts in promoting routine vaccinations and sharing truthful, science-informed information about immunization, and encourages all Wisconsinites to trust science, to make a plan to get vaccinated and boosted on-time, and to help their family members, friends, and communities get vaccinated and boosted, too, so that together we can save lives;
